The Lords Justices met the Judges Deputations at 12 o'clock and after some conversation entered into a general discussion, stating the matters to be considered, and requesting to hear what they had to say.

Mr Bovill made explanations, pointing out the difficulty of applying the provisions of the Act, as framed, to Scotch cases, and suggesting that the Commissioners should be empowered to take evidence in Scotland; but that the Scotch Judges should not be required to attend, as in English cases, personally.

The question of the time, when the Act should come into operation, was then discussed, and the Judges expressed a strong opinion that the time should be extended to the 1st October next, in order to allow sufficient time for making the necessary arrangements.
